without Christ.

Dear Brothers and Sisters in Christ,

Near the Lutheran Theological School in Philadelphia there is a Hare Krishna temple. During my orientation to seminary our class got to visit the temple and speak with the lead teacher there. We learned that the Hare Krishna's are a sect of Hinduism, who focus on the Lord Krishna. They meditate and practice a form of yoga.

One thing that has stayed with me from our visit, was when we got to observe the waking of the deities. Up on the altar, petitions were slid back and ornately dressed women brought out three strange looking dolls. The dolls were then very carefully bathed and dressed in colorful clothes. Finally bowls of fruits and vegetables were placed before them. It was explained to us that this ritual takes place every day. The gods (the dolls) are woken up, they are bathed, they eat, and then later they are put back to sleep.

I found this quite odd at the time, and I'm still not sure I understand it. However, I often find myself remembering this, when I'm in the sanctuary changing our banners and rearranging the back-wall mural for a new season. A couple of weeks ago I found myself thinking about those god dolls again, while I set up the Christmas tree and brought down angels and the baby Jesus from the attic.

How different is this? Might an outsider also find this yearly tradition odd, especially if I explained to them that we believe that the baby Jesus is God?

Of course we don't believe that the little porcelain figurine is actually God or even Jesus. But I don't think the Hare Krishna's really think their dolls are God either. However, we should not condemn too quickly – for nothing is impossible with God, and God can be everywhere and in all things.

Perhaps more importantly, this made me wonder why we are in the habit of changing banners and murals with the church seasons, and why we adorn the church with a fake pine tree with ornaments, and set out angel statues, and put electric lights in the windows. Are these things merely decorations? Do we put them out just because they're pretty?

There's no rule saying we have to have banners a certain color, or an Advent wreath during Advent, or a Christmas tree during Christmas. Martin Luther called all of this stuff "adiaphora," which is Greek (ἀδιάφορα) for "non-essential". So, we could get rid of all of it. Simplify our worship down to the barebones. Worship can be adequately done without a tree, and banners and lights. There would be nothing wrong with it.

But the thing is – I really like the tree, and the manger scene, and the lights, and not just because they are pretty, but because they add something. They help remind me – what Christmas is all about. The evergreen, the light and warmth from the candles, even the small porcelain Jesus, all help me to experience the God that these symbols point to. They help me experience the good news that Jesus brought into the world – that darkness and hate and death are not our future, but rather the light and love and life that is coming. For God is making all things new, and that includes a new me and a new you.

Merry Christmas!

GIVE+ Mobile

We have an exciting new giving option to tell you about. You now have the option to give to Emanuel with an app that you can download to your mobile device. The app allows you to make a donation using a credit card. You can choose to make a donation one time or choose to set up a regular donation.

Once you download the app, you can choose to give as a guest or you can sign up for an account and store your payment information securely for future use.

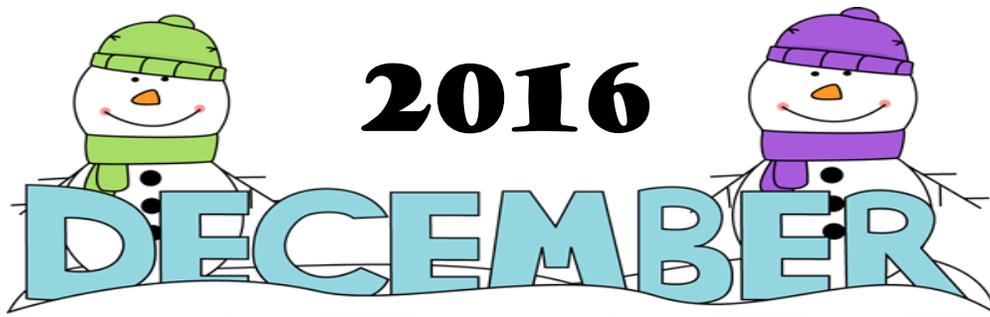

This option is administered by the same company that administers the Simply Giving program. It's a great option for someone who doesn't use Simply Giving, but wants to make sure the church gets their weekly offering when they are away. It's also a great option for someone who just wants to make a donation for a special event or need.

Here's how to get the app. Go to the app store for your particular mobile device and search for give plus church. Download the free app and then follow the instructions in the app. You can search for Emanuel by typing in "Emanuel Lutheran" or search churches by your location.
